Experts in Global Business and Human Rights Law
Numerous human rights standards are becoming legally binding on business through national laws, court rulings and references in contracts. Many businesses today are required to report on how they identify and address human rights impacts, and are measured against one another and held to account for the public commitments they make. Financial institutions in particular are increasingly required to integrate sustainability factors, including respect for human rights, into their investment decisions, consider the adverse impacts of an investment decision on human rights and make their governance policies consistent with the integration of human rights risks.

Failing to take the right action at the right time can now lead to litigation, sanctions, investor divestment, loss of legal and social licenses to operate, negative publicity and financial damage. Aside from it becoming a matter of legal compliance and the right thing to do, it also makes good business sense to respect human rights.

Businesses that respect human rights are able to focus on their core objectives and long term planning; develop positive relationships with regulators, business partners, shareholders and stakeholders; obtain legal and social licences to operate or sell their products and services; build strong brands and reputations; and recruit and retain the best talent.

Allen & Overy’s Global Business & Human Rights Law Group integrates lawyers from across the firm to provide both transactional and stand alone advice, as well as dispute resolution services in all areas of BHR law at national, regional and international levels.

A rapidly evolving legal landscape

The first global standard addressing the risk of adverse impacts on human rights linked to business activity was adopted at the United Nations in 2011. Since then, pressure has been mounting on States to protect human rights and corporations to respect human rights, and on both to play a role in ensuring that anyone who experiences a business-related impact on their human rights receives an effective remedy.

Varied and complex challenges for business

Companies have a responsibility, and increasingly a legal obligation, to identify, address and report on human rights issues in their own operations and in their networks of suppliers, partners and contractors.

Allen & Overy has the subject matter expertise to guide you safely through this rapidly changing legal landscape. We recognise that different clients are at different stages with respect to BHR issues, and confront different challenges, and we tailor our advice accordingly.

Common human rights challenges that we help companies avoid or address include:

- Projects caught up in corruption or required to comply with abusive laws
- Suppliers using forced labour (modern slavery), child labour or trafficking workers
- Projects displacing communities or depleting critical natural resources
- Unsafe or unhealthy working conditions and/or health impacts on local populations
- Businesses fuelling, or being involved in, conflicts, terrorism or war crimes
Excessive use of force by state or security forces protecting companies

Workers or communities unable to raise grievances, receive remedies or avoid reprisals

Products used to commit human rights violations

Impact of environmental harm and climate change on human rights

Tension between digital rights, privacy, and government demands for information

Social, cultural or economic disruption affecting vulnerable groups and the rights of indigenous peoples

Labour issues, barriers to freedom of association and unfair wages

Employees or customers facing discrimination or unequal pay

Association with other actors who abuse human rights or threaten human rights defenders
How can we help?

Our BHR experts support clients throughout all stages of their businesses as domestic and international legal frameworks adapt to regulate the impact of global business activity on human rights. Our multi-practice team provides holistic and sophisticated advice informed by legal and commercial considerations on matters that include:

- Policy design and compliance systems: We help clients design human rights policies to suit their businesses and operating contexts, and compliance systems to respond to the evolving expectations of stakeholders, investors, business partners, courts and regulators. We assist clients to devise innovative ways to ensure compliance with human rights standards, including by the entities in their value chains.

- Identifying risks and opportunities: We are able to identify and assess the positive and negative impacts of business activities on human rights across entire value chains and portfolios, and help clients understand the legal ramifications of their business activities.

- Governance and capacity building: We work with our clients to develop effective management structures and strategies to address human rights impacts, and advise company executives, legal departments and boards on best practices for implementing them.

- Measuring, reporting and communicating: We help clients set appropriate human rights performance targets and develop systems to monitor performance. We also assist with corporate reporting and communications with stakeholders, regulators and business partners, and advise on associated legal risks.
Our BHR team, which includes former prosecutors, are highly experienced in investigations and accustomed to dealing with regulators and prosecuting bodies, including across borders. We advise on human rights-related internal and external investigations, as well as the defence of enforcement actions, due diligence and compliance. We also advise on developing, planning and implementing BHR crisis management strategies and structures across a range of sectors.

Our BHR team includes dispute resolution experts, who represent clients in civil, criminal and administrative proceedings before State courts, as well in commercial disputes in international and investor-State arbitrations raising BHR issues. We also advise clients before international tribunals and non-judicial bodies, such as OECD National Contact Points. The disputes include mass transnational torts, claims against businesses for alleged involvement in State human rights violations and climate change litigation.

Our expertise extends to the design of grievance mechanisms and whistleblowing policies, tailored to the operating contexts of our clients around the world. We help our clients ensure that they have effective early warning systems in place and have the capacity to operate them so that they can prevent human rights impacts or provide remedies when impacts do occur.

We advise on the management of human rights-related regulatory risks and liabilities in mergers, acquisitions, disposals, financings, projects, joint ventures, investments and other transactions. We are uniquely well suited to provide guidance about the applicable regulatory climate and international obligations, analyse the human rights performance of target companies, and advise on innovative mechanisms to commit counterparties to respect human rights.

Thought leaders

We are at the forefront of the field, regularly contributing to academic journals, leading panel discussions, delivering training, speaking at conferences about business and human rights and engaging with international and domestic policy makers and regulators.

In addition, we publish the leading publication The Business and Human Rights Review, an interdisciplinary journal that brings together academia, business, NGOs and multilateral bodies to debate issues surrounding the relationship between business and human rights.
Innovators

As a leading law firm, we’re creating solutions to some of the most intractable challenges faced by companies, financial institutions and law firms today. We are the only global law firm to have embedded a tech innovation space, an online regulation tracker and a consulting business at the heart of our firm.

In our tech innovation space, Fuse, A&O lawyers, clients and start-ups come together to help clients exploit digital solutions in their own legal functions. Today, 500 global businesses rely on our online subscription service, aosphere, to understand and keep pace with their legal and compliance obligations globally, reduce spend on external counsel and access the best-quality data on the market – exactly at the time they need it. A&O Consulting helps clients respond to unprecedented challenges with high-quality, business-focused advice on issues relating to governance, corporate purpose and culture, conduct and operational risk, and regulations.

A&O’s BHR lawyers are working together with these innovative initiatives to explore, develop and test legal, regulatory and deal-related solutions to BHR problems for our clients.
Examples of our BHR experience

A selection of our BHR experience includes advising:

Financial services and corporate clients on their obligations to report on human rights issues under the Modern Slavery Act, and related due diligence exercises in respect of their supply chains and their own business activities, and drafting their Modern Slavery Statements.

A mining company listed in London and its subsidiary listed in an African country on designing its operational level grievance mechanisms, negotiating and revising its memoranda of understanding with the State police forces, and advising on security and human rights impact assessments and compliance systems.

A natural resource company including on more than a dozen BHR-related transnational tort claims before the English High Court, and advising on stakeholder communications, corporate annual reporting, board meetings and the AGM.

A FTSE 100 multinational with a complex food processing and retail supply chain, on developments in BHR-related regulation and transnational tort litigation, and risk mitigation measures regarding its suppliers and overseas operations.

Numerous industrial and energy clients on freedom of information requests, OECD National Contact Points claims, and supply chain disclosure obligations, including conflict minerals and payments to Government by the extractive industries.

European and American financial institutions providing project finance to infrastructure or energy projects in Africa and Latin America on the application of the Equator Principles, IFC Environmental and Social Performance Standards and UN Guiding Principles on BHR.

A tobacco company on litigation risk mitigation measures in relation to its supply chain in countries with a high incidence of modern slavery and child labour, including the use of blockchain technology and perpetual clauses in contracts.

An international financial institution on immunities issues, complaints procedures and emerging litigation risk in relation to the environmental and social impacts of projects and companies to which it lends or provides advisory services.

Lenders to the sponsors of a LNG project in an African country with respect to the sponsors’ arrangements with the State’s security forces and means to ensure that they comply with the Voluntary Principles on Security and Human Rights.

A Canadian headquartered mining company in relation to the suspension of its licences by Latin American countries on the basis of alleged environmental and social impacts of its proposed mine.

The United Nations Secretary General’s Special Representative on Business and Human Rights on the nexus between international investment law and international human rights law.

An oil and gas major in an investment treaty arbitration involving State defences based on the environmental and social impact of the company’s operations and alleged violation of local law.

A leading financial institution in delivering a workshop to the IT legal team defining the implications of the firm’s human rights policy for that team, identifying key human rights risks for the team’s business and practical steps to implement the policy and remedy breaches.

A range of companies in relation to their non-financial reporting requirements under the UK Companies Act, particularly in relation to human rights, environmental and carbon emissions.

An industry association in submitting an amicus curiae brief in the Second Circuit in an Alien Tort Statute lawsuit brought against a financial institution by victims of genocide.

An African State in defending an investment treaty arbitration involving claims of human rights violations.
